Degree programme

Modern commercial activity combines a high level of mobility, structural change, competitiveness, varied customer needs, changing social values and complex legal regulation. Specific legal issues can only be resolved by expert personnel; This means that commercial decisions must be taken by those with a background in more than Business Administration. As company management requires the application of a high level of Business Administration understanding, employers are increasingly demanding recruits with knowledge and skills in both fields.

The Bachelor's degree programme Business Law seeks to cater to this need, combining aspects of both Law and Business Administration to equip its graduates for a career in the senior management of companies and commercial associations. The qualification is rounded off by training in the Social Sciences, Economics, Quantitative Methods and foreign languages; subject-specific key qualifications impart skills relevant to a professional setting and provide an insight into areas in which the students hope to launch their careers. Students also have the opportunity to complete an internship semester in an international context, which provides them with valuable experience in areas in which they later hope to perform specialist and managerial tasks in a range of commercial and institutional settings.

Professional field

Located at the interface of Business Administration and Law, this degree programme opens doors in a range of commercial areas, whether in a traditional company setting or in roles dealing with legal issues in a commercial context. Graduates from this programme are highly sought after in HR and legal and compliance departments, in a contract management setting. Banks, insurance companies, Management Consultancies, trade associations and foundations also profit from their unique expertise.

Graduates of this programme also study on a range of post-graduate courses, including the Consecutive Master's degree programme Business Law in an International Context taught at the HWR Berlin
